

Event: Book Presentation “Plan, Develop, and Successfully Defend Your Thesis: A Guide to Better Results,” by Dr. Alberto Tokeshi

Date: Tuesday, June 23, 2026

Some books stay with us throughout our lives. They are the ones students remember and consult years later, after becoming professionals, because they found them at just the right moment. The book we are presenting tonight belongs to that special group.

This new edition of Plan, Develop, and Successfully Defend Your Thesis: A Guide to Better Results, by Dr. Alberto Tokeshi, Dean of the School of Economics, is grounded in his extensive experience in teaching and research methodology.

The book provides important guidance not only for students writing their theses but for researchers in general. It highlights the importance of choosing relevant topics that add value, assessing the resources available, and properly citing sources and references while respecting the author’s intellectual property. This edition also explores how artificial intelligence is transforming the way researchers produce and organize information.

What we especially value, however, is his honesty as an educator, a quality that reflects what it means to be a great teacher. He reaches out to students who are uncertain, who sometimes procrastinate, or who feel that completing their thesis is impossible—and gives them the guidance and mentorship they need to earn their professional degree.

Universidad de Lima is proud to have professors who do more than share knowledge in the classroom. They deepen and continually update their expertise and make it accessible to everyone.

Throughout his time at Universidad de Lima, Alberto Tokeshi has been driven by a commitment to service and a passion for sharing knowledge. We celebrate your dedication to our University, which will always be your home. Through this book, your professional legacy will continue to inspire our community.

Thank you, Alberto!
